for Trustee-Appellee

1 TRAGER, District Judge:

2 In this bankruptcy appeal, the debtors, James and Karen 3 Wornick, ask us to reverse a district court order holding that 4 certain assets in connection with life insurance policies they 5 each held for the benefit of the other were not exempt from the 6 joint administration of their bankruptcy estates. Because the 7 inchoate interest that a spouse beneficiary holds in a reciprocal 8 life insurance policy does not constitute an asset of the 9 beneficiary's estate, the judgment of the district court is 10 reversed.

11
12 Background

13 The facts of this case are simple. On October 15, 2005, the 14 Wornicks filed a joint petition for bankruptcy protection under 15 Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. At the time, James and Karen 16 Wornick each owned whole life insurance policies on their own 17 lives for the benefit of the other, and each of these policies 18 had a cash surrender value.¹ James owned three policies payable 19 on his death to Karen, with a total cash surrender value of 20 $8,627.45, and Karen owned one policy payable on her death to

¹ The "cash surrender value" of a life insurance policy is "[t]he amount of money payable when an insurance policy having cash value, such as a whole-life policy, is redeemed before maturity or death." Black's Law Dictionary 1586 (8th ed. 2004).

1 James, with a cash surrender value of $8,994.71. The Wornicks 2 claimed that the cash surrender values of these policies should 3 be exempt from bankruptcy administration. The trustee objected 4 to these exemptions. The bankruptcy court sustained the 5 objections, ordering the Wornicks to turn over to the trustee the 6 cash surrender values of the policies. The Wornicks appealed to 7 the district court, which affirmed. This appeal followed.

9 Discussion

10 The only question this appeal presents is whether in a joint 11 bankruptcy case of spouses who own reciprocal life insurance 12 policies the bankruptcy estate of the beneficiary spouse is 13 entitled to the cash surrender value of an insurance policy taken 14 out by and insuring the other spouse. In other words, if A buys 15 an insurance policy on A's life and designates B as the 16 beneficiary, and if A and B file jointly for bankruptcy
17 protection, are B's creditors entitled to the cash surrender 18 value of the policy? The district court decided this question in 19 the affirmative, and we review the district court's decision de 20 novo. See KLC, Inc. v. Trayner, 426 F.3d 172, 174 (2d Cir.
21 2005).

22 The Wornicks claim that the cash surrender value of their 23 life insurance policies should be exempt under Section 3212 of

1 New York Insurance Law, which provides in pertinent part,

2 (a) The term 'proceeds and avails', in 3 reference to policies of life insurance,
4 includes death benefits, accelerated payments
5 of the death benefit or accelerated payment
6 of a special surrender value, cash surrender
7 and loan values

10
11 (b)(1) If a policy of insurance has been or 12 shall be effected by any person on his own 13 life in favor of a third person beneficiary, 14 or made payable otherwise to a third person, 15 such third person shall be entitled to the 16 proceeds and avails of such policy as against 17 the creditors, personal representatives,
18 trustees in bankruptcy and receivers in state
19 and federal courts of the person effecting
20 the insurance.

21
22 (b) If a policy of insurance has been or 23 shall be effected upon the life of another 24 person in favor of the person effecting the 25 same or made payable otherwise to such 26 person, the latter shall be entitled to the 27 proceeds and avails of such policy as against
28 the creditors, personal representatives,
29 trustees in bankruptcy and receivers in state
30 and federal courts of the person insured. If 31 the person effecting such insurance shall be 32 the spouse of the insured, he or she shall be 33 entitled to the proceeds and avails of such 34 policy as against his or her own creditors,
35 trustees in bankruptcy and receivers in state
36 and federal courts.

37
38 N.Y. Ins. Law § 3212 (emphasis added); see also 11 U.S.C.
39 § 522(b)(2) (providing that states may exempt certain property 40 from bankruptcy administration); N.Y. Dr. & Cr. Law § 282 41 (providing that insurance policies are exempt from bankruptcy

1 administration as provided in Section 3212 of the Insurance Law).
2 In essence, subsection (b)(1) says that if A buys insurance on 3 A's life and designates B as the beneficiary, then any interest B 4 has in the proceeds and avails of the policy is protected against 5 A's creditors. And subsection (b)(2) says that if A buys
6 insurance on B's life and designates A as the beneficiary, then 7 any interest A has in the proceeds and avails of the policy is 8 protected against B's creditors, and moreover, if A and B are 9 married, then A's interest is protected against A's creditors as 10 well.

11 The Wornicks' claim presents the slightly different question
12 of whether the cash surrender value of an insurance policy
13 purchased by A on A's life for the benefit of B is protected 14 against B's creditors, and thus does not fit precisely into 15 either of the exemptions provided by Section 3212(b)(1) & (2).
16 In rejecting their claim to an exemption, the district court 17 concluded that the cash surrender values of these insurance 18 policies were insulated only against the creditors of the insured
19 and not against the creditors of the beneficiary.² We disagree.

² The district court's holding was consistent with a prior decision of the Western District of New York, Teufel v. Schlant, No. 02 Civ. 81S, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27930 (W.D.N.Y. Sept. 24, 2002), which itself resolved what had been a conflict among the bankruptcy judges in the district on this issue - compare In re Mata, 244 B.R. 580 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 1999) (Kaplan, J.) (holding that Section 3212(b) did not exempt the cash surrender value of

1 It has long been the law that "[t]he beneficiary of a life 2 insurance policy, who may at any time be removed from the 3 benefited position by the insured and against the beneficiary's 4 will, cannot have a vested interest." In re Greenberg, 271 F.
5 258, 259 (2d Cir. 1921); see also In re Solomons, 2 F. Supp. 572, 6 574 (S.D.N.Y. 1932) (noting that when the insured reserves the 7 right to change the beneficiary, the cash surrender value is an 8 asset of the insured). The filing of a bankruptcy petition 9 creates a bankruptcy estate, which includes "all legal or 10 equitable interests of the debtor in property as of the 11 commencement of the case." 11 U.S.C. § 541(a)(1). "Whether the 12 debtor has a legal or equitable interest in property such that it 13 becomes 'property of the estate' under section 541 is determined 14 by applicable state law." Musso v. Ostashko, 468 F.3d 99, 105 15 (2d Cir. 2006). Under New York law, the revocable beneficiary of 16 a life insurance policy has "a mere expectancy or . . . an 17 inchoate right [in the policy] depending entirely upon the will 18 of the insured." Davis v. Modern Indus. Bank, 279 N.Y. 405, 410, 19 18 N.E.2d 639, 641 (1939). As such, the beneficiary has no legal an insurance policy from the beneficiary's creditors), with In re Polanowski, 258 B.R. 86 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 2001) (Bucki, J.) (holding that the exemption did apply in cases like this because the beneficiary holds no administrable interest in a spouse's life insurance policy), overruled by Teufel, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27930. As discussed below, we agree with Judge Bucki's opinion in Polanowski.

1 or equitable interest in the policy that could be made part of 2 the property of the beneficiary's bankruptcy estate. Section 3 541(a)(5) of the Bankruptcy Code, entitled "Property of the 4 Estate," accords with this well-established principle by 5 providing that a debtor's interest in a life insurance policy is 6 only property of the bankruptcy estate when the debtor acquires 7 or becomes entitled to acquire the proceeds either before or 8 within 180 days of filing the bankruptcy petition. 11 U.S.C.
9 § 541(a)(5).

10 With regard to the insurance policies at issue here, the 11 insured could have changed the beneficiary at any time prior to 12 filing for bankruptcy, and the beneficiary would have had no 13 claim to the cash surrender value. It must be remembered that 14 the trustee stands in the shoes of the debtor and can only assert 15 claims that the debtor could have asserted prior to filing for 16 bankruptcy. See, e.g., In re CBI Holding Co., 529 F.3d 432, 447 17 (2d Cir. 2008) (noting that "a bankruptcy trustee stands in the 18 shoes of the bankrupt corporation and can maintain only those 19 actions that the debtors could have brought prior to the 20 bankruptcy proceedings") (internal citations and quotations 21 omitted). Thus, it seems obvious that because the beneficiary 22 here holds nothing more than an inchoate interest and has no
23 claim to the cash surrender value of the spouse's insurance

1 policy, the cash surrender value is not subject to administration 2 by the beneficiary's trustee in bankruptcy.

3 It has been suggested, however, that the Bankruptcy Reform
4 Act of 1978, by allowing for the first time spouses to file
5 jointly, worked a fundamental change in the powers of a 6 bankruptcy trustee to administer the estates of spouses in cases
7 like this. See Teufel, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27930, at *13-14
8 (suggesting that the identical issue on appeal before the Western 9 District of New York presented a question of first impression 10 because spouses could not file joint bankruptcy petitions prior 11 to 1978); In re Jacobs, 264 B.R. 274, 277-78, 292-93 (Bankr.
12 W.D.N.Y. 2001) ("[T]he Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978 dramatically 13 changed such things, and there should be no doubt that in the 14 absence of an exemption statute, the beneficiary's interest 15 (whatever that is) in a life insurance policy is not exempt in 16 the bankruptcy case of the beneficiary."). Indeed, the district 17 court in this case followed a line of cases that generally 18 concluded that in a joint bankruptcy case, the trustee can reach 19 those assets that the couple, acting together, could have reached 20 prior to bankruptcy. For instance, In re Jacobs compared the 21 issue in this case regarding the cash surrender values of 22 reciprocal insurance policies to

23 a million-dollar Stradivari-crafted violin 24 sitting in a safe-deposit box with its

1 owners, husband and wife, each holding one of 2 two necessary keys to the box; and then the 3 couple filing joint bankruptcy to get rid of 4 their debts and arguing to their creditors
5 and the bankruptcy court that neither one 6 alone has a "choate" or attachable right to 7 the Stradivarius, but only a "mere 8 expectancy" that the other will co-operate 9 when needed.

11 Id. at 292. In such a case, according to In re Jacobs, "the 12 trustee may agree with himself or herself as trustee in two 13 different estates to retrieve the million-dollar Stradivarius 14 from the safe-deposit box." Id. at 294. Following this general 15 line of reasoning, the lower courts in this case concluded that 16 the trustee of the Wornicks' estates, standing in the shoes of 17 both spouses, could agree with himself to cash out the insurance 18 policies for the benefit of the beneficiaries' creditors. In 19 other words, because the Wornicks as a couple could have agreed 20 to cash out these insurance policies, the lower courts concluded 21 that the trustee was also empowered to do so by virtue of the 22 joint filing. We do not think this analysis is correct.

23 While Section 302 of the Bankruptcy Code allows spouses to 24 file jointly, it does not automatically consolidate their 25 estates. 11 U.S.C. § 302(b) ("After the commencement of a joint 26 case, the court shall determine the extent, if any, to which the 27 debtors' estates shall be consolidated."); see also In re 28 Jorczak, 314 B.R. 474, 480 n.8 (Bankr. D. Conn. 2004) ("A joint

1 petition does nothing more than simultaneously commence two 2 individual cases. . . . [When a joint petition is filed] two 3 separate bankruptcy estates-the husband's and the wife's - are 4 created. A joint petition . . . , unless substantively 5 consolidated, does not affect the legal rights or obligations of 6 the debtors, the creditors or the trustee.") (internal citations 7 and quotations omitted); In re Arnold, 33 B.R. 765, 767 (Bankr.
8 E.D.N.Y. 1983) ("Although a joint petition is filed, estates are 9 in legal effect separate or several. Section 302 has procedural 10 effect only. Although a husband and wife file a joint petition, 11 there are in fact two separate debtors. The right of exemption is 12 a personal privilege.") (emphasis added). And the trustee in 13 this case does not claim that the bankruptcy court ever entered 14 an order consolidating the Wornicks' estates. Nor does joint 15 administration allow the property of one spouse to be used to 16 satisfy the debts of the other spouse. See generally 2 Collier 17 on Bankruptcy P 302.02 (15th ed. 2005) (citing In re Hicks, 300 18 B.R. 372 (Bankr. D. Idaho 2003)). Thus, in our view, the trustee 19 may not reach assets in a joint filing that he could not have 20 reached had the spouses filed separately. Here, had the Wornicks 21 filed separate bankruptcy petitions, the trustee would have been 22 powerless to administer the cash surrender value as part of the 23 estate of the owner/insured because Section 3212(b)(1) provides

1 an express exemption in favor of the beneficiary. Likewise, 2 because the beneficiary's interest in the proceeds and avails of 3 the policy is inchoate, the trustee, standing in the shoes of the 4 beneficiary, would have been powerless to administer property to 5 which the beneficiary had no legal claim, notwithstanding the 6 lack of an exemption insulating the cash surrender value from 7 administration as part of the estate of the beneficiary. A joint 8 filing does not vest the trustee with the power to reach a 9 spouse's assets that would have otherwise been insulated, and in 10 the Wornicks' joint bankruptcy case, the cash surrender values of 11 their insurance policies are not administrable.

12 Indeed, to hold otherwise, and to allow the trustee to 13 administer the cash surrender values of these insurance policies, 14 would leave this area of the law in an awkward stance. As noted 15 above, Section 3212(b)(2) provides that if A and B are married, 16 and A buys insurance on B's life and designates A as the 17 beneficiary, then the proceeds are not reachable by the creditors 18 of either A or B. This exemption would also apply if B purchased 19 the insurance and then assigned it to A. See, e.g., In re 20 Rundlett, 142 B.R. 649, 654 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1992) (holding that 21 "when a husband assigns a life insurance policy on his life to 22 his wife, he is deemed to have acted as her agent so that she 23 should be regarded as having caused or effected the policy, with

1 the result that the proceeds, including the cash surrender value, 2 are exempt from the wife's creditors"). Debtors who are 3 similarly situated to the Wornicks, therefore, could easily 4 insulate their collective insurance policies from creditors by 5 simply transferring ownership of each policy from one spouse to 6 the other prior to filing for joint bankruptcy; the insured and 7 beneficiary could remain the same. Another option available to 8 similarly situated debtors would be to change the beneficiaries 9 of their policies prior to filing, after which the insured could 10 claim an exemption under Section 3212(b)(1).³ That the Wornicks

³ Whether either of these transfers could be deemed fraudulent need not be parsed here. Nonetheless, it bears noting that "even the conversion of nonexempt property into exempt property by an insolvent contemplating bankruptcy has been held a transaction not intended to defraud creditors in the absence of evidence of extrinsic fraud." In re Adlman, 541 F.2d 999, 1005 (2d Cir. 1976). New York's Fraudulent Conveyance law defines "assets of a debtor" as "property not exempt from liability for his debts. To the extent that any property is liable for any debts of the debtor, such property shall be included in his assets." N.Y. Dr. & Cr. Law § 270 (emphasis added). In cases like this, the debtor who would be doing the transferring is the insured, not the beneficiary, and in the estate of the insured the cash surrender value is exempt under Section 3212(b)(1). In other words, A is transferring property that cannot be used to satisfy A's debts, which is by definition not a fraudulent conveyance. Moreover, "Conveyance" is defined as including "every payment of money, assignment, release, transfer, lease, mortgage or pledge of tangible or intangible property, and also the creation of any lien or incumbrance." Id. Because, as discussed above, a beneficiary holds only an inchoate interest in an insurance policy, merely changing a beneficiary cannot be considered a conveyance of property capable of being fraudulent. See, e.g., First Wisconsin Nat'l Bank of Milwaukee v. Roehling, 269 N.W. 677, 679 (Wis. 1936) (holding that changing the

1 failed to foresee the utility of such trivial maneuvers prior to 2 filing for bankruptcy should not disqualify them for the 3 protection of New York's life insurance exemption.

5 Conclusion

6 In sum, the trustee wants to administer the cash surrender 7 values of insurance policies as non-exempt assets of the 8 beneficiary. Any leviable interest in this property, however, 9 belongs to the owner/insured, not to the beneficiary. Section 10 3212(b)(1) protects the cash surrender value from the creditors
11 of the owner/insured, and because the beneficiary owns no 12 administrable interest, the property is not subject to 13 administration. Therefore, the order of the district court is 14 reversed.

beneficiary of an insurance policy is not a conveyance and cannot be considered a fraudulent transfer). We are aware of no cases in which similar transactions were found to be fraudulent conveyances.
